I grow a mix of open-pollinated and hybrid varieties. Open-pollinated seeds are produced by crossing two parent plants of the same variety (in the same species) to produce offspring (seeds) just like the parent plants. Open-pollinated varieties have generally been grown for many years. Hybrid seeds are produced by crossing two parent plants of different varieties within the same species. The resulting offspring (seeds) will have characteristics from both parents. It is important to note the difference between hybrid and genetically engineered: hybrid seeds are crosses between the same species and genetically engineered seeds are the result of manipulating DNA between different species. I grow open-pollinated varieties in order to save seed from them. I grow hybrid varieties for plants that take longer to mature or flower. While hybrids are useful, they are also expensive, propagation-proprietary and tend to be owned by multi-national corporations. Seed saving is an important link in the sustainability chain and a must if we don't want to lose the diversity in our seed lines. If you would like more information on saving your own seeds, please do not hesitate to contact me with your questions.
